The Echo Music Company
(1890)

John Franklin Kinsey (1852-1908) was born and raised in Allen County, Indiana. He showed interest in music as a child and attended the Chicago Musical School under George F. Root. He was a very successful teacher and writer, conducting musical normal schools and regular classwork throughout the region. He then taught at the Methodist College in Fort Wayne and became Principal of the Music Department (The Methodist College later evolved into Taylor University). He later moved to Lafayette, Indiana, and started a music publishing business. One publication was the journal "The Echo" which he originally started as the "College Echo" while teaching. The publications were very successful and the company eventually moved to Chicago. He lived there until poor health forced him to leave the business and return to Fort Wayne. He wrote, compiled, or contributed to many volumes of music for church, school, and home use. He died in Fort Wayne after being paralyzed by two strokes.

We part again with cheery, smiling faces,
While in our hearts the sad refrain we sing;
We ne'er may meet again in pleasant places,
And ne'er again our parting praises bring.

A kind good-night we give to all at parting,
Your motto may it ever be the right;
Goodnight, and if the parting be forever,
We give to all a long farewell: Good-night.

We part again, but not with heartless strangers,
But grasp the hand as we have done before;
We pray that each be guarded from all dangers,
Who hear our last goodnight song o'er and o'er.

Good-night, good-night, until again we meet you,
Our golden watchword ever keep in sight;
And if we ne'er again may hope to greet you,
Then must we meet to say no more: good-night.
