Editorial Note

Musæ Iovis is known from two sources: Le septiesme livre, contenant vingt et quatre chansons a cinq et a six parties, Tielman Susato, Antwerp 1545, and Cambrai, Bibliothèque Municipale, MS. 125-128 (124), known as the Zeghere van Male chansonnier, dated 1542. For this edition a facsimile of the Susato partbooks and the PDF version of the Cambrai MS. available from the Petrucci Music Library were consulted. In the Susato books the piece is headed In Josquinum a prato, Musicorum principem, Monodia. Benedictus. In Cambrai it is designated Benedictus : Nenia in mortem Judoci de Pretis (quem in vulgo Josquinum de Pres vocant) cantoris suavissimi (Dirge on the death of Judocus de Pretis - who is called Josquin des Pres in the vernacular - sweetest of musicians).

There are relatively few disagreements between the sources, mostly confined to notes that are conjoined in one and separate in the other, and in the use of coloration and ligation. In this edition readings from Susato are generally followed. Exceptions are listed in the critical apparatus (i.e. where I have listed a reading as coming from Cambrai in the apparatus, I have followed Susato in the edition and vice versa).

The text comprises the first two stanzas of a four-stanza elegy. In the Susato collection there is also a setting of all four stanzas by Gombert. The full text is provided in the Tenor part-book as follows:

By Gerardus Avidius Noviomagi (Gerard Geldenhauer of Nijmegen), for Josquin des Pres, First among Musicians, a Dirge.

Ye Muses, melodious offspring of thrice-greatest Jupiter, make lamentation. The cypress draws in its leaves. The famous Josquin, the glory of temples, and your own glory, is dead.

Grim and merciless Death, who deprive the temples and princely courts of sweet sounds, what curse could I invoke upon you who take away the good, who spare the undeserving?

But Apollo, equipped with bow and arrows, threatens you with destruction, O you most vile Death, and urges the Muses to add both laurel and gold to their hair.

“Josquin,” he says “pleasing to the best and greatest Jupiter, rejoices with the heavenly beings and sings a sweet song: the glory of temples, the glory of the Muses”.

A Note on Text Underlay

Text underlay in music of this period is almost always problematic. While both sources agree substantially on the placement of phrase beginnings in the music, it is not always clear how the words are intended to fit the notes. This is especially true where there are substantially more notes than syllables. In a purely scholarly edition it may be suitable simply to reproduce (insofar as possible) the text as it appears in the sources, but in a practical edition it is necessary to lay the text out in the manner that modern singers are accustomed to. This underlay entails making decisions about where to place syllables, where melismata should be sung, and even occasionally when to add text not attested in the sources (see Thomas Schmidt-Beste, ‘Editorial Text Underlay Revisited’ in Dumitrescu, Kügle, and Marnix van Berchum, eds. Early Music Editing: Principles, Historiography, Future Directions, 105-39).

Where possible I have followed the guidelines of Lanfranco, Vicentino, Zarlino and Stocker as summarized by Timothy J. McGee (Medieval and Renaissance Music: A Performer’s Guide, University of Toronto Press, 1988; 26-8) but I have not hesitated to violate them where it was more felicitous to do so. In general, the Cambrai MS. is more fully texted than Susato, but in places there are unnecessary repetitions and incorrect word orderings. Both sources make use of iterum marks (ij in Susato, :: in Cambrai) to indicate repetitions of text, but where Susato abbreviates, Cambrai often writes in full. Both sources leave some longer passages untexted and it seemed advisable to introduce text repetitions rather than create excessively long melismata – especially where rhythmic or melodic gestures suggested it. There are also a number of passages in Cambrai that provide text where Susato has not. Text from Susato is presented in normal typeface; itera are marked by italics. Text supplied from Cambrai has been presented in a different typeface, and purely editorial insertions are enclosed in brackets.
