This work is edited from:

Beati omnes. Psalmus CXXVII Davidis: sex, quinque et quatuor vocum, a variis, iisdemque praestantissimis musicae artificibus harmonicis numeris adornatus, & modis septendecim concinnatus, hinc inde autem collectus, atque in unum uolumen redactus, & in lucem editus, per Clementem Stephani Buchaviensem et egranorum incolam, Anno 1568. Nuremberg: Neuber, 1569

Zirler was an amateur musician; his “day gig” was as a court official to the elector Friedrich III of Heidelberg. He is primarily known today for 20 Tenorlieder published in Georg Forster's Frische teutsche Liedlein. Evaluation of his work, then and now, was mixed. I find this setting fresh and appealing, though there are a few moments where the counterpoint gets clotted, and he tends to use his whole bag of tricks, in a way that a more experienced composer might not.

Proofreading of the pitches of the original print was good. The same cannot be said of the text. Spelling has been modernized to correspond to the text in the Liber Usualis, but in two cases, words are inconsistent between partbooks: m. 27-31 where we have both “qui” and “quia”, and 76-77, which has “homo” and “homini”. In the latter case, I corrected the lower voices, with the original “homini” in italics beneath. (Assigning the original “homini” to the Bassus requires setting 2 syllables to one note.) I left “qui/quia” as-is; the notes available did not always allow for an extra syllable.

Pitches:

m. 56, Discantus: first note is a minim

m. 106-7, Bassus. The original pitches (given above the notes) don't result in anything you want to listen to, so I've assumed error and created a more usual bass line.

The print is at <http://img.kb.dk/ma/stephani/beat-omn-15.pdf>, for anyone who wishes to check my work. Duration is about 5' Proportion of the triple section is “3”

Besides its home in the Office, this text is appropriate for weddings (several of the Nuptial Mass Propers are taken from this psalm). – JAQ 1/9/22
